

When a country develops its technology, the traditional skills and ways of life die out. It is pointless to try and keep them alive.

In the new century, technology is an inevitable issue in our lives. Most of the countries around the world are progressing day by day in terms of accessing the development of technology. Besides these prosperities the way and style of people's life has changed. Also, the modern technology is replacing ~~with~~ some traditional ways and systems of life. The question is whether we should attempt to ~~conserving~~ conserve/preserve ~~the~~ some old skills of life or they are dated and it is better to ignore them.

Initially, people tend to live in a convenient and contemporary environment ~~and situation~~. By this I mean, technology brings ~~s~~ us so many facilities and accommodations in comparison ~~caparison~~ with the past. Generally, people would like to achieve their goals sooner and technology provides them it in an easy way. For example, computers, Tablets and not to mention the internet provide us with so many opportunities to save ~~the~~ time. For instance, tablets are is portable and using the internet is mostly feasible in every place. Then, people can do their careers from distance and use telecommuting instead of wasting so much time on the way. Furthermore, we are surrounded by lots of items that they have provided ~~us~~ welfare, so ~~so~~, we owe this to the technology.

Secondly, ~~technology~~ technological advancements have changed the life of people greatly in almost all societies. Some have adopted the new ways of life and have learned their way around them it, whereas many are baffled by these changes and they do not seem to learn how to use these new technologies ~~technology~~ such as, old people. Moreover, there is no doubt that some old-fashioned methods of life are still worthwhile since ~~Since~~ most of the traditional systems and skills show the culture of each country namely, handicraft and also some types of painting. A large number of geniuses in classical music like Chopin and Beethoven belong to the past, however, they are not antiquated. Day by day composers and musicians realize more the specific status of them in classical music. In addition, we could not have alternatives to some traditional skills of life to the new and modern style of life because of some benefits of old skills.

To conclude, it would be efficient if we ensured d some traditional ways of life by some modern techniques and simultaneously try to expand ~~the~~ technology. This is not attainable unless we manage them in the a best way.
